Core values

Crispy rice (Nurungji) is a long-standing Korean traditional dish made from dried rice on the bottom of a pot. Its exact origin is unclear, but it naturally occurred during the cooking process and has been with our people for a long time. Similar food exists in Chinese records, and the Joseon Dynasty medical book Dongui Bogam contains records of its use to treat stomach diseases. In the past, it was enjoyed as a common food, such as Sungnyung or snack, and today it is consumed in various forms.

In addition to the nutrition of rice, nurungji has special effects. Dextrin helps digestion and relax the stomach, and dietary fiber promotes bowel movement, which is effective in preventing constipation. Carbon content generated during the production process may contribute to strengthening immunity and detoxification. In addition, amino acids and dietary fiber can help relieve hangovers, and weak alkaline properties can help neutralize the acidic environment in the body. Nurungji can also have a positive effect on diet by providing a feeling of fullness.
